Please consider these important views in deciding the fate of our nuclear waste. 1) Are people in communities that have no prior experience with this material prepared to deal with the required changes to their lives? For instance, the railroad that moves along within one mile of my home will now carry some of these wastes... along with other seriously dangerous chemicals. How shall we feel safe under those daily transport schedules? 2) The people who have worked (and developed the safety standards for their jobsites and communities) are far better prepared for handling these waste materials. Sites must be developed that require the least amount of handling of the wastes. I have outlined for your consideration only two views, so please do not assume a lack of concern for the greater issues of our natural world. Thank you, Charles
