

1 [* had the political hacks employed a sharp pencil, by now some method of levying fees on that deposition or at least transportation of the material, could have been in place. those fees, likely ultimately paid by the various utility generators, could have been enormous. maybe for starters, the annual state school budget. or, the shortfall in the highway fund account. or, at least some pump up in the education funding. or a couple of new schools. or, a fire station or two. or, a teacher accreditation facility. or, some additional nurse training facility. or, some more metro cops. and if the aforementioned brick and mortar facilities were sited on the brown ground/downtown rail yard property, it'd have been a win-win. that before the 12 step official discards what's instead, hapless harry reid et alii have vowed to fritter away any taxpayer money necessary to stall the project. same as those dolts who rear ended we taxpayers with massive costs via those law suits on the us95 widening.]

size 2 hats, all.

as a resident well north of "the valley" guess I'd be "affected" before the city residents.
